INTRODUCTION

The Year 1979 will go down in the history of our race as a year of positive efforts on the parts of literary leaders to produce books in our own language which the society deserved long ago. The history of Khasi language was brought out in May this year; this morning I prefaced another book of literary criticism ; and I feel somewhat proud that this history of Khasi literature also is now made available to our reading public. I am happy to be instrumental in transforming it from possible codex into book.

Ka History ka Thoh ka Tar is in more ways than one a systematic compilation of the material Dr. R. S. Lyngdoh had used in class-rooms, magazine articles and Radio talks. It contains five chapters covering the period of Khasi literature from William Carey's mission to John Roberts. The author had to rely substantially on the work of G. Angell Jones and others which he duly acknowledges. The first chapter is very original. It gives readers an information about the power and beauty of Khasi language, the similarity of the language with other languages, and hints at dialectal variation of Khasi. From the second chapter onto the fifth, it proceeds with the written history of our literature with occasional promises for more volumes to come out. -

Though biographical critics may have their own say on the work; a great deal of scholarship exhibited by the author will not fail to interest critics of other schools. Whether or not the author takes the mentality of the Khasi reading public into consideration while writing the book, it has special appeal to foreigners also, especially to the Welsh in Wales. It will relieve our students from the burden of translating Dr. H. Bareh's A Short History of Khasi Literature mentally and practically while preparing for examinations. Until current or future research proves otherwise, the fact and figures given in this book are sure to serve as a starting point for those who engage themselves in meaningful study of Khasi literary history. The book is handy, interpretative and simple in style, that adding more words into the introduction may, I am afraid, take away some amount of curiosity and thrill of the readers. I better stop here; but before long I must say that with this work, Dr. Lyngdoh has started filling the gap up which should and could have been done so a few decades ago.

PUBLISHER'S NOTE

The number of copies printed in 1979 was not sufficient to meet the increasing demand for this book, in fact all the copies exhausted in the middle of last year; hence the Present impression is called for. The author has not revised the work, therefore all facts presented in the previous copy remain though this publisher strongly feels that a revision is called for.

Soon after the publication of the work, several errors have been detected in the spelling of words; but in the present impression care has been taken to correct those. Attention has also been paid to stylistic presentation which, it is believed, will meet the taste of well-informed readers.

The want of an elementary poetical work for the use of Khasi children has long been left.

There are doubtless many persons more qualified than myself to supply the want but as none of them have come forward I thought it best to lead the way by printing the following few pages which are the first of a series intended for the purpose.

I am conscious of the numerous faults and imperfections of my work and am well aware that I am not at all disciplined in the art of authorship. Still I hope that these few pages may be treated with kindness as an encouragement at least to Khasi poetry and I may be allowed ample quarter on account of the poorneess of the language."
